

RETIREMENT

TOP 10 QUESTIONS TO ASK YOUR RETIREMENT FINANCIAL ADVISOR

One of the most significant financial transitions is retirement. You'll want to make sure you have the best financial advisor who works for you to protect your dreams in this transition. The following ten questions will help you better understand their capabilities, experience, and philosophy when it comes to helping their clients create a successful retirement. Please ask these questions to your current or prospective retirement financial advisor.

Are you a True Fiduciary?

Why do you do what you do?

How do you make money?

How long have you been working as a retirement
financial advisor?

Do you have any
regulatory/legal issues?

Does your firm hold
my money and investments?

Do you manage retirement
portfolios the same or differently from non-retirement portfolios?

Can you help me create an income strategy for retirement?

Do you provide comprehensive financial planning?

What do you see as the biggest risks in retirement?

1. Are you a True Fiduciary?

It doesn't make sense to pay for advice when the advice doesn't have to be in your best interest. Period. A True Fiduciary is someone who is legally obligated to give you advice that is in your best interest. Yes, this means there are advisors (the majority of them, actually) who get paid by their clients and who do not have to put their client's interests ahead of their own.

Ridiculous. Ludicrous. Preposterous.

Why in the world would you pay someone for advice when what the advisor is recommending may actually be in their best interest? I just don't understand this. Imagine going to a marriage therapist and paying her to help you improve your marriage but knowing that she is also a divorce lawyer who can help you get divorced if your marriage doesn't go well. Why in the world would you pay for her marital "advice"? I'm hopeful that one day all financial advisors will be fiduciaries who are required to put their clients' interests first, but until then, this should be your first question to any potential retirement financial advisor.

2. Why do you do what you do?

This is a question that doesn't get asked often enough. At the end of the day, you don't just want an advisor to legally put your interests ahead of their own (see #1). In fact, you don't even want an advisor that has a moral obligation to put your interests ahead of theirs. You want a financial advisor that is honored to always put your interests ahead of his/her own – an unbiased and independent steward of your money. Talk to the advisor. Find out what makes him tick. Why does she do what she does? Ask why they do what they do so you can learn why they want to work with you.

3. How do you make money?

There is nothing wrong with getting paid to provide expertise and service. At the same time, you need to know who you are working with and how they get paid. It's important that you are getting value and expertise that exceeds what you are paying. If you work with a good retirement financial advisor, this shouldn't be too difficult. There are many ways to reduce your taxes, plan your estate, build an appropriate retirement asset allocation, and help you create lifetime income to live on in retirement. Good retirement advice should more than makeup for the fee.

4. How long have you been working as a retirement financial advisor?

I've written about the 10,000 hour rule before. This rule was coined as a result of the work by psychologist Anders Ericsson on exceptional performers. His research shows that great performers practice a lot. The 10,000 hour rule is a rule-of-thumb for how much practice is required to develop expertise in a field of study. What this means is that it often takes at least 10 years of focused effort and experience in order to gain mastery in an area. Keep this in mind when you interview retirement financial advisors.

5. Do you have any regulatory/legal issues?

You've worked hard for 30 or 40 years and now you want to make sure your assets are safe and managed judiciously so you can travel and enjoy your retirement. If you are relying on your retirement financial advisor to help you throughout this process, it makes a lot of sense to verify your advisor has not had any legal, regulatory, or license issues. A quick way to do this is to use the FINRA BrokerCheck website as a starting point. If the retirement financial advisor has any licenses or designations (e.g., CFP®), check these organizations' websites to see if anything has been reported there.

6. Does your firm hold my money and investments?

What you want to hear is no. There is a subtle, but significant, difference between a firm that manages your investments and one that manages and holds your investments. It is hard to overemphasize the importance between these two types of retirement planning firms. Why is this question important and something I've written and talked about for years? It has to do with investment fraud. If the firm managing your money also holds your money, there is a greater opportunity for embezzlement. The goal is to protect yourself and your finances as much as possible. This is why I feel so strongly about having a custodian -- an unaffiliated and large firm -- hold your investments (such as Charles Schwab, TD Ameritrade, Fidelity, etc.) and a separate RIA retirement advisory firm to manage the assets.

7. Do you manage retirement portfolios the same or differently from non-retirement portfolios?

What you are trying to understand is their philosophy to retirement investing. I'd argue that it makes sense to at least think of pre-retirement and retirement investing differently. This doesn't mean your portfolio needs a complete shift the day after you retire, but there should be a re-evaluation of the portfolio, the allocation, and an income strategy as you approach and throughout retirement. Someone who is 35 and is focused on saving and growing their money requires a different strategy than someone who is 68 and is living off their investments.

8. Can you help me create an income strategy for retirement?

In retirement, this is one of the most critical and overlooked areas. Retirement is all about income. Once you stop working, the only sources of income for most retirees is Social Security, maybe a retirement pension if they are lucky, and their investment portfolio. A good retirement plan is one that provides the necessary income to live on and one that lasts a lifetime. This requires special planning and an investment approach that may look different from the accumulation phase during the working years. Your retirement financial advisor needs to be well-versed in creating retirement portfolios that provide for lifetime income and be able to communicate their approach to you in a way that makes sense.

9. Do you provide comprehensive financial planning?

Comprehensive financial planning is just as important at age 35, 55, 65, or 75. Although the type of advice may look different at each phase of life, each stage offers its own challenges and opportunities. In fact, I could argue that having a comprehensive financial advisor is even more important in retirement because you have more at stake. A good retirement financial advisor will be able to look at your entire financial picture and make adjustments and recommendations in areas such as taxes, asset preservation, insurance planning, cash flow, and income strategy. Since you have less time to overcome mistakes or bad decisions in retirement, it is critical your retirement advisor can see the big picture and how the seemingly small decisions affect your overall retirement success.

10. What do you see as the biggest risks in retirement?

A red flag is to hear there are no risks or that they eliminate all risks. A response like that is either ignorant, arrogant, or deceptive. None of these are great qualities for an advisor. There are financial and non-financial risks at every age. Most advisors don't want to scare potential clients, but at the same time they should be aware of and be honest about the risks retirees face. Being blind or sugarcoating these risks is not a good strategy. A better approach is to identify them and come up with a plan to eliminate or reduce them.

In addition to these ten questions, there is another tool you can use to help evaluate potential financial advisors. It's called AdvisorFit and it's a free website I created to help people ask the right questions to financial advisors and to help them understand the responses. It's not foolproof and it doesn't guarantee you'll get a great advisor, but I'm hoping it helps.

I also hope you find a good retirement financial advisor. After working with retirees over the past 20+ years, I know how hard people work and save and how much they look forward to a comfortable retirement. You deserve someone you can trust and who knows how to help you reach your goals.

About the retirement financial planner

Robert Pagliarini, CFP®, EA, MA is passionate about helping people planning for retirement. He's the founder of Pacifica Wealth Advisors -- a fiduciary and fee-only retirement planning firm that has clients across the country. Robert has over 20 years of experience as a retirement financial advisor.

You may have seen him on Katie Couric, Dr. Phil or Good Morning America as an expert in retirement and investment planning. Robert is a certified financial planner as well as a CFP® Ambassador, one of only 50 in the country! Currently, he is earning his Ph.D. in retirement planning and is focused on how to make retirement portfolios last decades while providing a steady source of income.

If you have any questions about your retirement plan or investment strategy entering retirement, feel free to contact Robert today.

PACIFICAWEALTH

GROWING MORE THAN WEALTH